LEGISLATION

There is very clear legislation forcing all businesses to undertake risk assessments. The legislation is also very clear that it is not just the duty of the employer to risk assess, but it is the duty of everybody in the workplace to become involved in the process of risk assessment.

The Management of Health and Safety at Work Regulations 1999 states that employers with 5 or more employees need to carry out risk assessments and record their significant findings.

This DVD will train the employer and the employee how to conduct risk assessments effectively in order to comply with the law.

During 2004/05 220 people were killed and over 150,000 were injured at work because of a failure to manage risk.

In view of these worrying statistics, Safety Media have developed a NEW interactive DVD. 5 Steps – Risk Assessment in your Workplace is an innovative solution for risk assessment training.

This DVD will show the viewer how risk assessments don't need to be daunting and time-consuming tasks. An emphasis is placed on how they can easily become second nature during a working day.

Over 17 minutes, this DVD covers

- What is a risk assessment?
- What is a hazard?
- How to conduct a risk assessment – a detailed look at the 5 Steps involved.

This fun-to-use, unique, interactive DVD portrays a series of potentially hazardous scenarios and invites the viewer to choose the correct solution by pressing a button on their remote control. By becoming actively involved in watching the DVD, viewers are more likely to retain the information transmitted by it, and less likely to let their attention wander. Opportunities can also easily be created for discussion during the training session if the 'wrong' answers are chosen.
